CIBER Covers the World

http://us-ciberweb.org/
The students you are teaching today will be competing tomorrow on a global basis. How will you and your faculty colleagues develop your understanding of how business is conducted around the world? The most exciting and effective way for faculty to develop their own skills is by first-hand experience.

The 17 Centers for International Business Education and Research (CIBERs) at major universities in the United States have developed a cost-effective method to meet this need through several overseas programs for Faculty Development in International and Sustainable Business (FDIB/FDSB). CIBER programs cover key emerging market regions of the world: Latin America, Cuba, Sub-Saharan Africa, and the Middle East, as well as the major markets of Europe, China, and Australia.

Participating faculty members, as well as business professionals and graduate students, gain firsthand knowledge of how business is conducted in a particular region of the world and the opportunity to network with overseas counterparts. They can integrate international examples into the courses they currently teach and develop new teaching and research interests, as well as make important business and professional contacts.

Each program combines business, academic and governmental visits, cultural experiences and university presentations, all providing the opportunity to see just how cultures and institutions influence the conduct of business.

Please contact each CIBER directly about their program(s) or visit the central CIBER website at http://us-ciberweb.org/.
